“Ronnie, wow I'm still in shock and can't believe you are gone. I've known you and your family for over 20 years and can say I'm glad to say that we were friends. We had a lot of good times together and I am going to miss our limo trips to celebrate my birthday and your big bro's birthday-- we looked forward to them and always had a GREAT time. Most of all I will miss our fantasy football league and our smack talking about who was going to win this year and your emails telling me to change my league name to Brown Booger Bairs in 2009! Always the funny guy and the one to make everybody laugh with your off the wall comments. I will also miss being able to talk football talk with you and calling you for advice in my other leagues. I knew you would always give me good advice and knew what you were talking about. Both you and your bro are walking football statistics and that knowledge definitely helped me expand my football awareness to what it is today.

You will definitely be missed, you are gone but not forgotten. Your memory lives on through your son, you were such a great, caring loving father. You did what so many men don't do, you were a single father and would not have had it any other way. You cared so much for your son and you used every moment possible to express that and made sure we all knew how important that role was to you. You have family that will carry on what you started, and friends that love and miss you. We will draft a team for you in your memory please believe that! RIP Ron Po!
